Historical Context and Authorship

Lorraine Hansberry wrote A Raisin in the Sun in 1959, a period marked by the burgeoning Civil Rights Movement. At 21, she was already a voice for change, having studied at Columbia University and participated in the Harlem Renaissance’s intellectual circles. The play’s title derives from a line in Langston Hughes’s poem “Harlem,” which asks, “What happens to a dream deferred?” This line encapsulates the heart of Hansberry’s work: the tension between aspiration and reality.

Hansberry’s own family history—her mother’s experience with racism and her father’s activism—shaped the narrative’s authenticity. She was the first Black woman to have a play on Broadway, a milestone that underscores the importance of studying the full text to understand her pioneering contribution to American drama.

Plot Overview

The story follows the Younger family as they navigate life in a cramped apartment in Chicago’s South Side. A $10,000 insurance check, meant to pay for the family’s future, becomes the catalyst for conflict, hope, and revelation. The narrative is divided into five acts, each revealing deeper layers of the family’s dreams and struggles.

Act One: The Dream Begins

Walter Lee Younger, the family’s breadwinner, plans to invest the insurance money in a liquor store. His wife, Ruth, is skeptical, while their mother, Lena (Mama), dreams of buying a house. The family’s young son, Travis, is innocent and unaware of the tensions that surround him.

Act Two: The House of Dreams

Mama's insistence on buying a house in a predominantly white neighborhood sets the stage for conflict. Walter's business partner, Karl Lindner, offers the family a bribe to stay away from the new neighborhood, highlighting systemic racism.

Act Three: The Cost of Compromise

Walter's business venture fails, and the family faces financial ruin. Ruth's pregnancy becomes a source of tension as the family debates whether to keep the baby or adopt.

Act Four: The Breakthrough

Despite the setbacks, the family finds strength in each other. Walter's decision to take responsibility and the family's collective decision to move into the new house demonstrate resilience.

Act Five: The New Dawn

The play concludes with a sense of hope and determination. The Younger family's journey reflects the broader African American experience during the mid-20th century.
