Historical Context

J.K. Rowling's inspiration for Hogwarts' setting came from her own experiences in Scotland during her childhood and university years. She often mentioned that the "mysterious" and "remote" feel of the Highlands was a key influence. The castle's architectural style—towering stone walls, turrets, and a sprawling courtyard—mirrors real Scottish castles such as Urquhart and Inverness. The surrounding forest, with its mossy stones and hidden glens, echoes the mythical Forbidden Forest. By blending these real-world elements with the fantastical, Rowling created a setting that feels both tangible and otherworldly.
